Faulconer outlines $4M in economic relief

Daily Transcript Staff Report

San Diego city officials unveiled a $4 million economic relief package Wednesday that reduces fees, provides certainty and offers support to local employers affected by the global pandemic known as COVID-19.

"Businesses are following public health orders, and we recognize this has an impact," Mayor Kevin Faulconer said in a statement. "This relief effort is about restoring some balance to the current situation."

"San Diego businesses are making a necessary sacrifice while bearing a tremendous burden as they comply with these orders. We're taking aggressive action today to help them stay afloat and continue to pay as many employees as possible."

The new programs include a tax certificate deferral program and an extension of all business permits. The relief package also calls for a suspension of water filling fees for business owners, and a removal of penalties for late payments, ensuring there are no commercial account shutoffs.

"As chair of the city's economic development committee and a former small business owner, I feel that it is imperative we, as a city, take a holistic approach to ensure there is minimal impact to our regional economy," City Councilman Chris Cate said. "This economic relief package is without-a-doubt, a step in the right direction. It will protect both employees and employers not only today, but tomorrow, and days to come."

The commercial utility program mirrors previous relief efforts provided to San Diego families struggling to make payments.

The tax certificate deferral program will prevent business owners from being penalized for late renewal submissions for up to 120 days. It will include a one-year forgiveness period for business tax certificate penalties and surcharges when reestablishing delinquent accounts.

The proposed extension of all business permits will last for 180 days and can be stretched

Donna Insalaco had to lay off 40 of the 45 employees at Pizzaiolo, her gourmet pizzeria in downtown Oakland, after sales fell through a "black hole."

"A lot of tears," Insalaco said, "All of us here live check-to-check."

Responding to a statewide call for restaurants to close their doors to dine-in customers, Pizzaiolo is now only offering pick-up and delivery.

"We're calling as many as we can as quickly as we can. We want to know what they need so we can advocate for them," Sanders said.

Schools, Businesses Close

Over the past week, school districts across San Diego County have closed their doors in an effort to slow the virus's spread, and many businesses and organizations have shut down their offices, directing their employees to work from home when feasible. Sporting events have been cancelled, and gatherings of 50 or more people have been prohibited.

At the beginning of the week, county health officials announced a sweeping set of measures, including the closure of all bars, breweries and tasting rooms; an order that restaurants must close their dining rooms and only serve food for takeout or delivery; and a prohibition on visiting patients in hospitals or long-term care facilities. In addition, hospitals must postpone all elective surgeries. Those measures took effect on Tuesday, March 17, and will run through March 31.

As the crisis intensified over the past week, businesses in the tourism and hospitality industry were among the most immediate casualties, with some restaurants reporting their business down by 70 percent, and hotels in downtown San Diego with occupancy rates at 10 percent, officials said. Closures of such tourism stalwarts as SeaWorld, LEGOLAND California and the San Diego Zoo created ripple effects through the local economy.

Restaurants Among Hardest-Hit

Jeff Rossman, owner of two San Diego restaurants, Terra American Bistro near SDSU, and Bunz Burger Joint in Hotel Circle, said he's had to cut his staff by 60 percent due to the county's closure order and the drop in business as residents practice "social distancing."

Rossman, a chef and president of the San Diego chapter of the California Restaurant Association, said he was revamping his menu to eliminate items that require a lot of prep time, as well as items that don't travel well. He is also setting up an online ordering portal for customers and creating a family style menu in which entrees and sides are priced by the pound. He's also thinking of creating do-it-yourself pizza making kits and pre-packaged cookie dough that parents and children can make together.

Customers will have the choice of curbside pickup, coming inside to the bar area to get their orders, or delivery through services such as Grub Hub and Door Dash, Rossman said.

"We're doing it just to see if it works. If not, our next alternative is to close completely," Rossman said, noting that it's a two-way street — his restaurants can feed people who may have limited access to food during the crisis, and residents can support local businesses such as his. "We're trying to be socially responsible and stay in business."

The local chapter of the restaurant association on Tuesday sent out an email survey to its 1,000 San Diego members to find out if they are remaining open and if so, what services they are offering, Rossman said. The group plans to compile the information and put out a neighborhood guide to restaurants for the benefit of customers.

Rossman acknowledged the stress he's under as he works to keep the lights on at his businesses, which he has been operating for 27 years.

Getting the Job Done

"You put blood, sweat and tears into your business. And something comes along out of the control of everybody, it comes from out of nowhere and stuns the economy," he said.

Peter Zien, owner of AleSmith Brewing Co. near Miramar Road, said his revenue has been cut by at least 35 percent as restaurants and bars that serve his beer close. But he is still operating a drive-through service and selling packaged product to retailers, and has so far avoided staff layoffs.

"We're trying to keep staff motivated and jamming, people still need their beer," he said, during a teleconference hosted by the North San Diego Business Chamber on March 17.

"Right now is an opportunity for us to shine. It could turn out to be our finest hour so we are trying to stay motivated and strong," Zien said.

Organizations Rally in Support

As businesses do their part, a number of agencies and organizations are working together to disseminate information and help both businesses and workers cope with the coronavirus fallout.

Peter Zien

Among them is the San Diego Workforce Partnership, which has set up a hotline — at 619-228-2982 — that will be open during business hours Monday through Friday to answer questions from business owners and workers, said Andrew Picard, chief programs officer. The agency has also updated its website to include resources for businesses and workers.

Andrew Picard

“Right now we are trying to make sure people are aware of these resources and are taking advantage of them before taking drastic steps to reduce their workforce.”

ANDREW PICARD

One key resource, he said, is the Work Sharing Program, run by the state Employment Development Department. The program is aimed at helping businesses retain their workers, allowing them to cut their hours by up to 60 percent, with the employees able to receive unemployment benefits to make up for at least part of their lost wages. State disability and paid family leave benefits are also available to help workers, Picard said.

The Workforce Partnership can help businesses enroll in the Work Sharing Program, Picard said. Gov. Gavin Newsom has waived the normal one-week waiting period for unemployment benefits, and businesses can also request a 60-day extension for filing payroll taxes, Picard said.

"Right now we are trying to make sure people are aware of these resources and are taking advantage of them before taking drastic steps to reduce their workforce," Picard said.

Government agencies at all levels must do what they can to support businesses and workers during this crisis, Picard said. "We have every indication this is going to have profound impacts on our economy."

Another agency offering support to local companies is the U.S. Small Business Administration, which has an office in downtown San Diego.

The SBA offers disaster loans to businesses that have suffered economic injury as a result of the coronavirus pandemic, said Mike Sovacool, deputy district director of the agency's

San Diego office. The money can be used by businesses to cover operating costs until economic conditions improve.

Nationwide, the agency has $50 billion to fund the loans, which can be made up to $2 million, for a repayment term of up to 30 years. Interest rates range from 3.75% for businesses to 2.75% for non-profits, Sovacool said.

Businesses can apply for the loans online, or by calling a special hotline at 800-659-2955, Sovacool said. Applications take two to three weeks to process, and once all loan documents are signed, funds can be disbursed in 7 to 10 days.

Phone calls to the agency from business owners have spiked during the crisis, said Sovacool, with most of the callers calm but concerned in the face of the pandemic. But he said the SBA is staffed up and ready to handle the onslaught, as it has during past disasters, from hurricanes and floods to wildfires and mud slides.

"Providing disaster relief is something the SBA has done for a long, long time," Sovacool said. "The programs and process and expertise are in place."

Coalition Launches Response Fund

Also this week, a coalition of public agencies, nonprofits and companies announced a COVID-19 Community Response Fund, which had reached $4 million by March 19, including a $1 million donation from San Diego Gas & Electric. The San Diego Foundation will make grants to local nonprofits, which will in turn use the money for food assistance, rent and utility payments and gap funding for lost wages for San Diego County residents. Grants will also be made to struggling nonprofits.

SDG&E has announced it will not disconnect service for nonpayment, and will waive late fees for businesses, as well as set up flexible payment plans for customers struggling to pay their bills.

Cox Communications has announced similar measures, waiving data usage overage charges until May 15 as customers work and study from home, not terminating residential or small business customers for being unable to pay their bills during the crisis and waiving late fees.

On Wednesday, the South County Economic Development Council announced it will offer one-time $5,000 loans with no monthly payments and zero percent interest to assist eligible restaurants in South County during the COVID-19 pandemic. Repayment will be due April 1, 2021, and a total of 50 loans will be provided. ■

60 PERCENT OF COUNTY'S RESTAURANTS COMPLETELY CLOSED, ASSOCIATION SAYS

Aid programs begun for owners, workers; donations requested

BY DAVID GARRICK

An estimated 60 percent of restaurants in San Diego County have chosen to close completely during the COVID-19 crisis, instead of continuing operations focused on takeout and deliveries, the California Restaurant Association said Monday.

To help affected employees of local eateries, the restaurant association has launched a "Restaurants Care" program that is accepting donations, including an initial $100,000 from the owners of Skrewball Whiskey in Ocean Beach.

Meanwhile restaurants in South County are eligible for 50 loans of $5,000 each under a new program announced Monday by the South County Economic Development Council.

Also county officials announced they have approved a six-month deferral of environmental regulations. One positive has been loosened state regulations allowing restaurants to deliver beer, wine and cocktails during the pandemic to boost their revenue, he said.

Many restaurants also have had to increase their sanitizing efforts and implement new safety procedures to recognize social distancing.

"We're an extremely safe environment," Rossman said. "We are going to come out of this, but please, please help out your restaurants."

A list of restaurants offering takeout and delivery options during the crisis is available at sandiegorestaurantweek.com.

The association also has launched Restaurants Care, a program that aims to provide one-time support grants to restaurant employees facing hardships with gas, utilities, rent or other basic living needs.

"Please donate so we can say 'yes chef!' to all the deserving foodservice workers in dire need of help," says the new program's website, restfoundation.org/donate, today. For details, visit that

The $5,000 loans from the South County Economic Development Council come with no monthly payments and no interest fees, and full repayment isn't required until April 1, 2021.

The small infusion of funds is intended to assist South County small restaurants to remain open and continue to provide meals, the council said in a news release.

The loans also have no application fees and no pre-payment penalties. Applications can be submitted online at SouthCountyEDC.com.

SAN DIEGO — An estimated 60 percent of restaurants in San Diego County have chosen to close completely during the coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis, instead of continuing operations focused on take-out and deliveries, the California Restaurant Association said March 23, 2020; ever since recent County and City regulations have banned restaurants from offering dine-in.

To help affected employees of local eateries, the restaurant association has launched a “Restaurants Care” program that is accepting donations, including an initial $100,000 from the owners of Skrewball Whiskey in Ocean Beach.

Meanwhile restaurants in South County are eligible for 50 loans of $5,000 each under a new program announced Monday by the South County Economic Development Council.

Also county officials announced they have approved a six-month deferral of environmental health permit fees for restaurants. The annual fees range from $753 to $1,930 depending on the size of the restaurant.

County officials have also asked their staff to explore ways to clear any barriers to re-opening that some restaurants might face once that becomes possible.

The Restaurant Association efforts and the new county initiatives were announced at a joint downtown news conference that also featured leaders from several other local organizations.

The San Diego Food Bank announced it is stepping up its deliveries and drop-offs to those who can't afford restaurants or groceries. The Food Bank also is seeking more volunteers and donations during the pandemic.

City of San Diego officials said they are continuing to implement a $4 million economic relief package that will include small business loans, fee deferrals and extensions of building permits.

And the North San Diego Business Chamber is providing daily updates at sdbusinesschamber.com with helpful resources, including links to the United Way and disaster loan programs from the Small Business Administration.

Restaurant closures and the impact on their employees were the primary focus of the 30-minute news conference, which was held March 23 at the County Administration Center on Pacific Highway.

"We are estimating that about 60 percent of all of our restaurants have closed," said Jeff Rossman, president of the local chapter of the California Restaurant Association. "You can imagine how many thousands and thousands of employees have been affected."

Rossman said many restaurants have had to transform themselves overnight into businesses focused on takeout and deliveries, instead of serving customers who eat in. Some have added new menu items, such as bake-at-home pizza, he said.

One positive has been loosened state regulations allowing restaurants to deliver beer, wine and cocktails during the pandemic to boost their revenue, he said.

Many restaurants also have had to increase their sanitizing efforts and implement new safety procedures to recognize social distancing.

"We're an extremely safe environment," Rossman said. "We are going to come out of this, but please, please help out your restaurants."

The website sandiegorestaurantweek.com has a list of restaurants offering take-out and delivery options during the crisis.

The association also has launched a "restaurants care" program that aims to provide one-time support grants to restaurant employees facing hardships with gas, utilities,

“Please donate so we can say ‘yes chef!’ to all the deserving foodservice workers in dire need of help,” says the new program’s website calrestfoundation.org/donate-today and for details, visit that site or text “restaurant” to 91999.

The $5,000 loans from the South County Economic Development Council come with no monthly payments and no interest fees, and full repayment isn’t required until April 1, 2021.

The small infusion of funds is intended to assist South County small restaurants to remain open and continue to provide meals, the council said in a news release.

The loans also have no application fees and no pre-payment penalties. Applications can be submitted online at southcountyedc.com

Meanwhile, San Diego Food Bank president Jim Floros said his organization is ramping up its efforts.

“Our programs will continue during this crisis — there’s enough food,” he said. “The infrastructure is there; the distribution model is there; the supply chain is there.”

The bank has delivered 400,000 pounds of food to its 500 nonprofit partners during the last four days, Floros said. There have been 275 distributions since the March 12 state of emergency declaration in California, he said, and another 100 distributions are planned for this week. For details, visit sdfoodbank.org or call (800) 350-3663.

Phil Pace, owner of Phil’s BBQ, said at the March 23 news conference that many restaurants are focused on remaining prepared to re-open when that becomes possible.

“Being in the restaurant business, you have to have answers all the time, and they’ve got to be quick,” Pace said.

County Supervisor Jim Desmond offered similar sentiments. “When this health order is lifted, we must quickly get people back to work, our businesses open and our economy back to thriving,” Desmond said. “While we’re still in the midst of this coronavirus storm, we must plan for the best out of a bad experience.”

In a new analysis, VOSD's Ashly McGlone reviewed several local governments' and agencies' budgets to determine which ones are better positioned to weather the financial storm ahead.

"Governments heavily reliant on tax revenues that ebb and flow with consumers are especially vulnerable this year to losses following mass shelter-at-home quarantine orders," McGlone writes. "Stop the consumers and tourists, and you will see wild drops in cash flow."

Some school districts, like Sweetwater Union High School District and San Diego Unified, for instance, were facing budget distress even before the pandemic hit.

Behind the New Border Restrictions

For a region that has long preached the importance of keeping the border as open and efficient as possible, the new travel restrictions put in place to stem the spread of the coronavirus are a tough pill to swallow.

“Our whole mission has been to promote cross-border activity, keep the border open at all costs because that is critical to our well-being, our lifeblood,” the Chamber of Commerce’s Paola Avila told VOSD’s Maya Srikrishnan. “This is unprecedented, the situation that we’re in — none of us could have predicted the severity of it. [11:13:52 PM] [2:50] We'll talk about a delicious a win win as most people eat dinner at home tonight. A lot of them are still able to support San Diego RESTAURANTS. It's all part of the great American takeout. It's a campaign to support RESTAURANTS being hit hard right now. Corona virus pandemic news eats at the alford was out the south better night and she's got a look at how customers are feeding some love to their favorite eateries run third avenue in chula vista and normally you would see it be a bustling new business district. But now with the corona virus it's much slower. That's why this great American take out is critical to help our small businesses drive down third avenue in chula vista and the revitalized business district with shops, brew pubs and RESTAURANTS are closed. Only a few remain open on this course and go back to the balance. LaBelle is pizza garden has been open since 1950. The owner Tony russo says it's had to cut its workforce in half and compared to a usual Saturday. Business was down nearly 15000 dollars. The real impact has been in our dining rooms were closed. Stories like la bellies and thousands of other small RESTAURANTS are struggling during the corona virus shut down. Times like these we got support these small businesses. So the National movement called the great American takeout started on Tuesday to encourage people to order takeout delivery or pickup and maintain social distance. Health officials say risk of transfer the virus is very low risk. I grew up in the imperial beach. I've been coming to lavalas all my life down the street at the nutrition place held the option remains open for pickup. I may be sure that we're still able to stay healthy so we come out on the other side of this that we're still active and feeling great. The California RESTAURANT association says around 60 percent of RESTAURANTS in San Diego county have closed down during the corona virus. Thousands of jobs have been lost. LaBelle is driver says right now the dough is in deliveries. Anybody looking for a job there? They're out there but it's gonna be probably delivery. It's unclear how long. The governor stayed home. Order will last an impact our RESTAURANTS think for a couple more weeks I hope. But it could be even longer. And anything to help out this small business is appreciated. We're just super grateful for anyone that comes by and walking by the SOUTH COUNTY ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL is offering 50 LOANS at FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS each to help RESTAURANTS. SAN DIEGO — Drive down Third Avenue in Chula Vista and the revitalized business districts with shops, brew pubs and restaurants are closed, only a few restaurants remain open.

La Bella's Pizza Garden opened in 1950, the owner says since the dine-in ban, he had to cut half his workforce and comparing an average Saturday to this past Saturday, business was down nearly $15,000.

"The real impact is that our dining room is closed, and half our staff has been set off into a waiting period," said Tony Raso, La Bella's owner.

Stories like La Bella's and thousands of other small restaurants are struggling during the coronavirus shutdown.

"In times like these we have to support these small businesses. I grew up in Chula Vista, Imperial Beach, I've been coming to La Bella's all my life," said customer, Chris Manning.

The national movement called the Great American Takeout started on Tuesday to encourage people to order takeout, delivery or pickup while still maintaining social distance. Health officials say the risk of transferring the virus by takeout is very low risk.

"It's national support the small business day," said Manning.

Down the street at The Nutrition Place, a health option remains open for pickup.

"We all enjoy our food and reward meals as we call them but making sure that we stay healthy, so we come out on the other side of this and remain active and feeling great," said Mario Olmos, The Nutrition Place club operator.

The California Restaurant Association says around 60% of restaurants in San Diego County have closed during the coronavirus. Thousands of jobs have been lost. La Bella's driver says the dough is in the deliveries.

"If anyone is looking for a job they are out there probably deliveries," said Steve Shaw.

It's unclear how long the governor's stay at home order will last and how it will impact the restaurant industry, "I think for a couple more weeks, I hope," said Raso.

But it could even be longer and anything to help out the small business is appreciated.

"We are super grateful for anyone that comes by or walks by," said Olmos.

The South County Economic Development Council is offering a no-interest loan to eating establishments in South County in order to provide some economic relief during these difficult times. This small infusion of funds is intended to assist South County small restaurants to remain open and continue to provide meals during this national emergency. South County EDC will provide a one-time $5,000 no-interest loan with repayment due on April 1, 2021. At that time the entire loan amount will be due. It is anticipated that a total of 50 loans will be provided. To apply click here

Academy of Our Lady of Peace launches whole school virtual learning – a model for others

The Academy of Our Lady of Peace (OLP), the only all-girls' and oldest high school in San Diego, successfully launched virtual learning for the entire school this week.

Because of early planning and preparation during this COVID-19 situation, the school was able to seamlessly transition all 750 students and 80-plus faculty and staff members to virtual learning and work.

"Providing stability and continuity of learning for our students are our main priorities during this difficult time," said Dr. Lauren Lek, Head of School at the Academy of Our Lady of Peace. "Once we made the decision to close campus for the safety of our community, we immediately were ready to launch our online learning platform, which has been a tremendous success. Beyond just the delivery of instruction, we have intentionally woven into each day opportunities for community building with all 850 of us! I never thought it would be possible virtually until we were forced to do it. We are one giant virtual Brady Bunch."

Using their learning management system, Blackbaud, and video conferencing tools like Google Meet and Zoom Pro, classes have continued and learning has been uninterrupted. The school has even been able to host virtual all-school assemblies with more than 900 participants at once. The school was able to make this transition easily because of early planning by their Technology Department, which moved the school to fully cloud- and web-based tools years ago.

"We've received incredible feedback from parents, students and even the greater community who have heard how successful this has been," said Dr. Lek.

In addition to maintaining online learning, parent-teacher conferences will be hosted virtually and the school continues to offer counseling services on a regular basis as well.

COVID-19 taking major toll on San Diego nonprofits

Nonprofit organizations working on the front lines to meet critical needs across the San Diego region are facing unprecedented disruptions of their efforts due to the unfolding COVID-19 crisis.

According to survey findings released Tuesday by The Nonprofit Institute at the University of San Diego, many local charities are experiencing increased demands for food, shelter and other basic necessities, yet nonprofits have been hindered or completely cut off from responding due to issues of cash flow, managing volunteers, and technological barriers.

"Nonprofit organizations are our community safety net, touching millions of lives every day," said Dr. Emily Young, The Nonprofit Institute's executive director. "Yet, the unfolding public health and economic crisis is taking a major toll on the capacity of these organizations to help others. They need immediate economic assistance from government, philanthropy, and the community at large. We encourage everyone to do their part in donating to the organizations they hold dear."

Nonprofit leaders at 428 organizations reported they face immediate, critical challenges. More than three-quarters (80 percent) of respondents reported a reduction of normal services or programs related to school closures, stay at home orders, and social distancing.

Twenty percent of respondents reported they were unable to offer any programs at this time. If conditions do not improve, more than half report they are “very unlikely” or “somewhat unlikely” to be able to provide ongoing services eight weeks from now.

In an effort to continue offering services, many nonprofits are considering moving programs to online formats. However, technology access and moving programs online present challenges for nonprofits staff and their clients.

Among a list of growing concerns, nonprofit leaders rated the following as the most urgent challenges facing their organizations:

1. Decline in donations
2. Loss of fee for service revenue
3. Having to lay off employees
4. Delayed grant processing for program and/or general operating support
5. Government grant contracts that cannot be reimbursed

SBA implements automatic deferments of existing disaster loans

U.S. Small Business Administration Administrator Jovita Carranza announced changes to help borrowers still paying back SBA loans from previous disasters. By making this change, deferments through Dec. 31, 2020, will be automatic. Now, borrowers of home and business disaster loans do not have to contact SBA to request deferment.

More than 60 percent of county restaurants have completely closed

An estimated 60 percent of restaurants in San Diego County have chosen to close completely during the COVID19 crisis, instead of continuing operations focused on take-out and deliveries, the California Restaurant Association said.

To help affected employees of local eateries, the restaurant association has launched a “Restaurants Care” program that is accepting donations, including an initial $100,000 from the owners of Skrewball Whiskey in Ocean Beach.

Meanwhile, restaurants in South County are eligible for 50 loans of $5,000 each under a new program announced Monday by the South County Economic Development Council.

SAN DIEGO BUSINESS JOURNAL

THE COMMUNITY OF BUSINESS

<https://www.sandiegobusiness.org/blog/san-diego-business-journal-message-from-edc-president-and-ceo-mark-cafferty/>

As I write this, I can only hope for everyone reading that your families and loved ones are both healthy and safe. The impact of COVID-19 in all corners of our community has been devastating and has changed our lives in numerous ways.

Things have certainly changed for our team at San Diego Regional EDC over the last few weeks, so I write today to share our unique perspectives.

As an economic development organization, EDC plays a unique role in serving the business community. We recognize that so much of this is uncharted territory for all of us. But as always, it is important to step back and look at what we know and focus on where we are needed most.

Our regional collaboration is an asset recognized around the world and I am certain it is going to be a key reason why San Diego emerges from this global health crisis stronger than ever. There is no doubt we will be facing challenging weeks and months ahead. Accurate and timely communication will be critical to our business community.

In that vein, our team has spent the last two weeks making outreach calls to our nearly 200 investors—the companies that underwrite our work. These companies range from regional giants such as Qualcomm, Sempra and Illumina, to shipbuilders like NASSCO, to hospitals/healthcare providers like Scripps, Sharp and Kaiser Permanente who are on the front lines of this crisis, to small and family owned business like Brown Law Group, Ace Parking and Jerome's Furniture. Some of them are busier than ever and some are struggling in unprecedented ways. Yet one resounding thing we have heard from all of them is that they want to know how they can help fellow San Diegans. Some of them have made donations to the San Diego Foundation's COVID-19 Community Response Fund and others have offered their manufacturing floors to produce critical resources.

Resources for the Business Community

While our team is still trying to get our hands around everything that is happening right now, and we certainly don't have all the answers, EDC has quickly pivoted to provide companies with a comprehensive list of resources that we feel can best meet their needs right now. And while these continue to change and expand by the day, I wanted to take a moment to point a few out:

City of San Diego – Economic Relief Package

Businesses in the City of San Diego may be eligible for the Economic Relief Package, which provides approximately $4 million in reduced fees. It includes a Small Business Relief Fund, where businesses can apply for grants and/or low-interest loans, as well as an extension of business permits and business tax-deferral options. I know some other cities in the region are working on their own relief packages as well.

Small Business Administration–Economic Injury Disaster Loan

The San Diego and Imperial Small Business Development Center can provide no-cost guidance through a company's recovery process. Businesses can apply for an Economic Injury Disaster Loan, which may provide up to $2 million of financial assistance. SBA also has immediate $25,000 bridge loans available (less paperwork) for small businesses with an existing relationship with the SBA. To apply for these programs, visit SDIBDC's website and click "request counseling."

Organizations Offer Businesses Time, Money

Resources Offered By Local, State, Federal Entities

■ By JOE TASH

San Diego business owners have two things foremost on their minds as they deal with the economic fallout from the coronavirus pandemic – the first is concern for employees, many of whom have been laid off or had their hours cut, and the second is securing capital to pay their bills.

"What we're seeing is a panic for cash flow, for payroll, rent, and to survive," said Danny Fitzgerald, associate regional director with the San Diego and Imperial County Small Business Development Center network. "We're hearing from those that are in dire straits."

The network, which provides support for local businesses under contracts with the U.S. Small Business Administration and the state of California, has been inundated with calls since state and local officials ordered schools and non-essential businesses to shut down and residents to stay home.

Tourism and hospitality businesses, including restaurants, were initially hard-hit by the slowdown as people stopped traveling and dining out, but the effects are spreading out to other sectors of the economy, from printers and florists to gyms and movie theaters.

"The network's call volume has increased tenfold, and we were busy before," said Fitzgerald. The network operates eight offices in San Diego and Imperial counties, but those have closed since the crisis began, and the organization now offers its counseling services online and by phone.

The SBDC's counselors are helping business owners apply for disaster recovery loans through the U.S. Small Business Administration, and from other loan sources, said Fitzgerald. That advice includes how much to ask for, and what to do if they are initially declined.

Businesses should also evaluate their cash flow needs to determine how long they can survive, and contact creditors and landlords to request deferrals on loan payments, rent and other expenses, Fitzgerald said.

Along with the SBA disaster loans, he said, the state offers disaster loans to small businesses, which are guaranteed up to 95 percent, through the California Infrastructure and Economic Development Bank (IBANK).

The city of San Diego has announced a $4 million small business relief fund, while the San Diego Foundation and a coalition of public agencies, nonprofits and companies has established a community response fund, which has grown to $6.2 million and will help workers hit by the economic slowdown with payments for food, utilities and rent.

A $2 trillion relief package working its way through Congress last week promised additional aid, from direct cash payments to individuals and families to small business loans to a $500 billion corporate bailout fund.

In an effort to gather information about the impact of the coronavirus crisis on the local economy, the SBDC network, the San Diego Regional Chamber of Commerce and the San Diego Regional Economic Development Corp. have sent out a survey to businesses.

As businesses seek assistance to keep their doors open or to simply survive until the economy picks up, the San Diego office of the SBA has seen its call volume spike, said Mike Sovacool, the agency's deputy district director.

The agency had an initial $50 billion to work with, said Sovacool, and it has already begun approving loans, with early recipients including at least one San Diego business, Sovacool said.

"The process is working," Sovacool said. Sovacool and officials with business groups in San Diego suggested that loan applicants familiarize themselves with the application form and required information before beginning the online loan application, which can be found at www.sba.gov.

Along with funds for the loans, the SBA has received funding for staff and infrastructure improvements to handle disaster loan applications from around the country, Sovacool said. "The SBA is ramping up to meet demand for the program."

The wave of applications for disaster assistance has led to slowdowns of the SBA web site. Sovacool suggested applicants might find it easier to access the web site during off-peak hours, after 6 p.m. or before 8 a.m.

"There are some system challenges but they're going to get fixed," he said.

The agency's goal is to process loan requests within two to three weeks, and in the early stages of the crisis, he said, some applications have been approved in as little as three days.

"The entire SBA and its resource partner network and lending institutions, they're all here to help (small businesses) get through this disaster," Sovacool said.

Business groups throughout San Diego County are working, in most cases remotely, to assist companies in dealing with the crisis, whether it's answering questions about workplace issues, putting out information about resources on their web sites, or offering support and encouragement.

The South County Economic Development Council established a $250,000 loan fund to provide 50 loans of $5,000 apiece to South County restaurants struggling after San Diego County health officials ordered all restaurants to close their dining rooms and serve food only for takeout or delivery.

Restaurant owners in South County are "desperate to know how to keep their doors open," but in spite of the economic situation, there is a sense of unity and shared purpose, said Cindy Gompper-Graves, president and CEO of the South County EDC.

Gompper-Graves said the loan application form is only one page, meant to streamline the approval process, and the first checks went out on Tuesday, March 24, less than a week after the loan program was announced.

"I still have funds left, once I get through today, we will have 20 to 25 loans available. I'd be happy if we could give all this money to the restaurants and they stay open to serve the community during these trying times," Gompper-Graves said.

The story is much the same in the East County, where businesses are scrambling to meet their expenses and avoid laying off employees if they can, said Jo Marie Diamond, president and CEO of the East County EDC.

The group is working with business owners in different ways, helping them connect with lenders and advising on how to keep their operations going virtually, as workers stay at home and carry out their duties while caring for children and attending to household matters.

"We're all mobilizing to the best of our abilities, but it's some scary times," Diamond said. "We'll come through this, it's just a question of when."

Debra Rosen, president and CEO of the North San Diego Business Chamber, said she's been impressed with the creativity shown by businesses as they keep in touch with customers and even broaden their reach online. Such as 24 Hour Fitness centers that have closed their physical locations but are putting workout videos online through a free app.

"People are looking for unique ways to stay engaged with their customers," Rosen said.

One way the public can support local businesses, said Rosen, is by buying restaurant gift cards, providing them with a much-needed cash infusion while also getting an early jump on holiday shopping.

Along the Convoy corridor in San Diego, businesses owned by Asian-Americans were among the first to feel the economic pinch due to the stigma surrounding Asian people after the coronavirus outbreak began in China, said Wesley Quach, director of the Small Business Development Center operated by San Diego's Asian Business Association.

"It's a fact that not just Asian-Americans but Asians around the world have experienced increased prejudice, racism and threats because of this," Quach said. As early as January and February, local Asian-owned businesses experienced a drop-off in customers.

While some restaurants have tried to stay open during the crisis, others are geared more toward an in-person dining experience and have closed temporarily and laid off workers, Quach said.

That said, businesses along the Convoy corridor are also trying new and different ways to connect with the dining public. Last week, he said, the Dumpling Inn-Shanghai Saloon hosted a "mukbang," an online event in which a host on Instagram samples different foods and talks about them while chatting with observers. The practice began in South Korea, and has become a worldwide trend. The name means "eating show" in Korean. About 100 viewers took part in the online event, Quach said.

Businesses are also helping each other, as well as displaced workers, through the crisis. Jerry Sanders, president and CEO of the San Diego Regional Chamber of Commerce, said a gastro pub based in Barrio Logan served meals for displaced restaurant workers, dishing up some 700 plates the first day and pledging to keep going until its food was gone.

"One of the hallmarks of San Diego is the fact that we take care of each other," Sanders said.

Going forward, the San Diego business community will be gathering information from business owners to target its efforts to where help is most needed, said Mark Cafferty, president and CEO of the San Diego Regional EDC. In the first week since its business impact survey went out, Cafferty said, some 500 responses have come in.

San Diego's industry sectors are rising to the occasion, said Cafferty, from hospitals and healthcare providers, to communications companies making sure the city is connected, to biotech companies racing to find a vaccine for the coronavirus.

"From science to healthcare to technology, to other elements of our economy, they are trying to make a difference, it's really impressive," Cafferty said. ■ repayment amount will be due until April 1, 2021. It is anticipated that a total of 50 loans will be provided.

This small infusion of funds is intended to assist South County small restaurants to remain open and continue to provide meals during this national emergency. South County EDC wants to invest in the small and independent restaurant establishments that make up a big part of the economic landscape of the region and is spearheading these efforts with a projected $250,000 in loans.

Loans will have no application fees and no pre-payment penalties. Furthermore, and in alignment with government and health official guidelines, the application process will be conducted entirely through the South County EDC website only, with no face-to-face interaction. Applications are available to download and submit online and checks will be mailed to the approved businesses to limit personal contact and continue to comply with social distancing recommendations.

“As an economic development organization, South County EDC has always prioritized the economic health and well-being of South County businesses and communities,” said Cindy Gompper-Graves, CEO and President of South County EDC. “In an effort to support businesses through this evolving and challenging situation, South County EDC hopes to provide some economic relief to restaurants experiencing disruptions. We are here to invest in our small businesses that represent the fabric of our economy.”

City of Coronado Projects Millions in Lost Tax Revenue

By Jennifer Velez 03/31/2020

The majority of retail and restaurants have storefronts along Orange Avenue.

The future of revenue for Coronado, specifically monies derived from sales tax and Transient Occupancy Tax (TOT), will undoubtedly be at an unprecedented low this year, and even before the COVID-19 crisis the city was feeling the downturn. This came in large part from the major construction at The Del for their master plan with sales tax down $312,000 and Transient Occupancy Tax (TOT) down $834,000 for a combined total loss of $1.1 million. Now the city is regrouping and adapting to the rapidly changing environment looking at decreasing revenues as businesses, restaurants and hotels are closed or operating on a diminished scale. The Chamber of Commerce, Coronado MainStreet and Discover Coronado are all working to help local businesses during this difficult time.

City Manager Blair King provided the following estimates on the impacts to major city revenues:

- TOT – Revised FY 19-20 Budget ($15,900,760) – Projected estimated actual FY 19-20 ($10,000,000), a loss of $6 million – initial FY budget $6,360,300 (a decline of approximately $9.5 million from budgeted FY 19-20)
- Sales Tax – Revised FY 19-20 Budget ($3,223,350) – Projected estimated actual FY 19-20 ($2,491,200), a loss of $730,000 – initial FY budget $1,289,340 (a decline of approximately $2 million from budgeted FY 19-20)
- Interest earnings – Revised FY 19-20 Budget GF ($1,724,800) – Projected estimated actual FY 19-20 ($1,400,000), a loss of $325,800 – initial FY budget $900,000 (a decline of approximately $825,000 from budgeted FY 19-20)

King also cited: Total loss revenue in FY 19-20 from these three sources = $7,055,800, total estimated loss budgeted FY 19-20 to budgeted FY 20-21 = $12,325,000. The percentage decline in revenues in FY 19-20 is approximately 11.5% and the year to year loss of FY 20-21 to 19-20 is approximately 20.2%.

King noted that "City policy allows committed reserves to be used if General Fund revenues fall below estimates by eight percent or greater. It is anticipated that the city will look to balance the fiscal year 20-21 General Fund budget with a draw from reserves." He also points out that it is early at this juncture to know if any position or projects will have to be cut.

Coronado Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Sue Gillingham reports that the Chamber has been hard at work to help local businesses in the following ways:

1. Our first priority has been sharing information about the restaurants as they were the first businesses to be shut down. We continue to track who is open for pickup and/or delivery, plus whether they sell gift cards. In general,

1. Our first priority has been sharing information about the restaurants as they were the first businesses to be shut down. We continue to track who is open for pickup and/or delivery, plus whether they sell gift cards. In general, businesses' evening orders are going as well as can be expected.
2. We designed a fun Bingo type game to encourage folks to order out at a variety of restaurants over a 10-day time period. We have lots of prizes including gift cards and Chamber related items such as our cheerful Orange Ave beach towels and the Coronado-opoly board game.
3. We have added other types of critical businesses, grocery stores, gas stations, pharmacies, hardware stores, hotels, to our website.
4. Finally, we have been listing retail businesses that make it easy to order online with either pick up at the store or home delivery.

For more details, check out the Chamber website at <https://www.coronadochamber.com/> There is also a list of resources such as the city's daily updates, where to file for unemployment and how to use sick leave during this time.

Gillingham comments that "We have begun focusing on financial assistance. The South County Economic Development Council (SCEDC) is providing interest free $5,000 loans to 50 restaurants in South County. I have been encouraging all Coronado restaurants to apply and know that at least one restaurant has received their loan."

The Chamber has also created a video covering two loans that are being offered by the Federal Government which will be shown on Channel 19 and is available on the Chamber website. The first one is the Economic Injury Disaster Loan (EIDL). It is administered by the Small Business Administration (SBA). Businesses may apply for up to $2 million of operating capital to cover payroll, mortgage/lease, accounts payable, and extraordinary costs as a result of the pandemic. Up to $10,000 of the loan can be a grant, and no repayment to the government will be required.

Coronado MainStreet Executive Director Rita Sarich is also dedicated to helping local businesses thrive and has been inundated with information from their national office and she is sharing everything with the city as they help the local business district. "We are pushing out pertinent information to every business at least every day. I'm sending a request to property owners to consider rent relief for their tenants. I'm attending webinars on what other cities are doing and getting some great ideas to pass on," comments Sarich. Check out the national website at <https://www.mainstreet.org/howwecanhelp/resourcecenter/covid19resources> and our local office at <https://www.coronadomainstreet.com/>

Local puzzles to keep you occupied are also available through MainStreet by emailing from861@gmail.com. Discover Coronado Executive Director Todd Little confirmed that Discover Coronado is working closely with leaders at the Hotel del Coronado, Loews Coronado Bay Resort, Coronado Island Marriott Resort and the Glorietta Bay Inn to reschedule events and guests that have been postponed. Several resorts have closed temporarily, but leadership teams continue to work on recovery plans. A recent survey from Northstar Meetings Group suggests that most meeting planners hope to reschedule their event between September and December 2020. Others will delay their event until 2021, or later. As of deadline, Coronado Island Marriott Resort and the Glorietta Bay Inn are still open, and both the Hotel del Coronado and Loews Coronado Bay Resort are closed until further notice.

Little said, "When it is appropriate to do so, Discover Coronado will use industry marketing that targets meeting planners and they are in regular communication with the City of

Little said, "When it is appropriate to do so, Discover Coronado will use industry marketing that targets meeting planners and they are in regular communication with the City of Coronado, briefing one another on changes as they occur." He highlighted that a redesigned website was launched in January DiscoverCoronado.com along with new campaign ("Un-Land Yourself") that distinguishes Coronado from land-locked meeting destinations.

One of the additional steps that the city has taken to ensure the health and safety of residents, as well as provide information and a sense of connection during this coronavirus pandemic, was setting up a call center. Senior Management Analyst Janine Zúñiga reports that the Call Center has been answering an average of two to four questions a day but sometimes up to eight calls. "In the past week, staff answered questions from callers wanting to know if parks, Dog Beach, the Bayshore Bikeway, and boat launch ramp were open. All are open; however, visitors must adhere to the social distancing protocol." She also reported that there have been calls for people wanting to volunteer and some needing assistance. The call center number is (619) 522-6380 and is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. seven days a week.

Food distribution has been modified to drive-thru format as a special precaution. Families and individuals are asked to stay in their vehicles during pick-up. The fresh and nonperishable food items are made possible thanks to Feeding San Diego, the San Diego Food Bank and Smart Food Foundation. Call (619) 420-3620.

Free food for kids: National City has teamed with Feeding San Diego to provide free emergency food for children. Packed lunches for kids are being distributed this week from 1-2:30 p.m. weekdays with no set end date at the Casa de Salud Youth Center, 1408 Harding Ave. The National School District provides free breakfast and lunch to students from 8-9 a.m. and noon-1:30 p.m. through Friday at Olivewood, El Toyon and Las Palmas Schools.

Santee offers online entertainment: The city of Santee offers a Virtual Activity & Resource Page at <https://bit.ly/3bDSjJ7> with links and ideas for fun, fitness, arts, education and well-being. Links include free fitness videos and apps (including Silver Sneakers for seniors), lots of children's crafts and recipes, virtual tours of museums, zoos and aquariums, and more. Have a great idea or resource to share? Contact the Community Services Department at amorrison@cityofsanteeca.gov.

IB task force: Imperial Beach Mayor Serge Dedina has created a task force in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. The task force has a committee dedicated to connecting community members with volunteers and organizations that can help. Complete an online form to volunteer or if you need of assistance with housing, transportation, food, immigration concerns, laundry, needing a friendly phone call, a volunteer for necessary errands or other vital needs. Once the form is submitted, a volunteer will reach out to assist you. Find the form at <https://forms.gle/141ehYnEMx5kZwdv9>.

Business help: The South County Economic Development Council is offering a no-interest loan to eating establishments in South County in order to provide some economic relief during these difficult times. Establishments can apply for a one-time $5,000 loan that doesn't have to be repaid until April 1, 2021. Apply at <https://www.southcountyedc.com/emergencybusinessloanprogram>. This program is just one of many offered to businesses and employers at the council's website. Visit www.sandiegobusiness.org/coronavirus.

Chamber hosts forum: Join the National City Chamber of Commerce at 9 a.m. Friday for a video forum to discuss the new 501(c)(3) National City Foundation to Support Community Response to COVID-19 and Associated Challenges. The forum's goals include serving as a vehicle to promote civic engagement and create a steady flow of residents to serve on local and regional boards and commissions, as well as serving as an ad hoc advisory board to the city council and convening local nonprofits quarterly to exchange ideas. Register at bit.ly/3aw9plC. Meeting link: <https://bit.ly/2UtDJy9>. Download ZOOM on your device.

Free rides: To help with the COVID-19 crisis, FACT is offering free transportation for San Diego residents for any essential need through April 15. Seniors, persons with disabilities, students, veterans and others who need assistance may call FACT at (888) 924-3228 between 8 a.m.-3 p.m. Monday through Friday, to request free transportation anywhere in San Diego County. Please have the names of rider(s), the pick-up address, and the pick-up time available when you call, and specify whether you use a mobility device, including wheelchair or scooter. Please call one day ahead when possible. FACT has limited daily capacity — the free rides are offered on a first-
